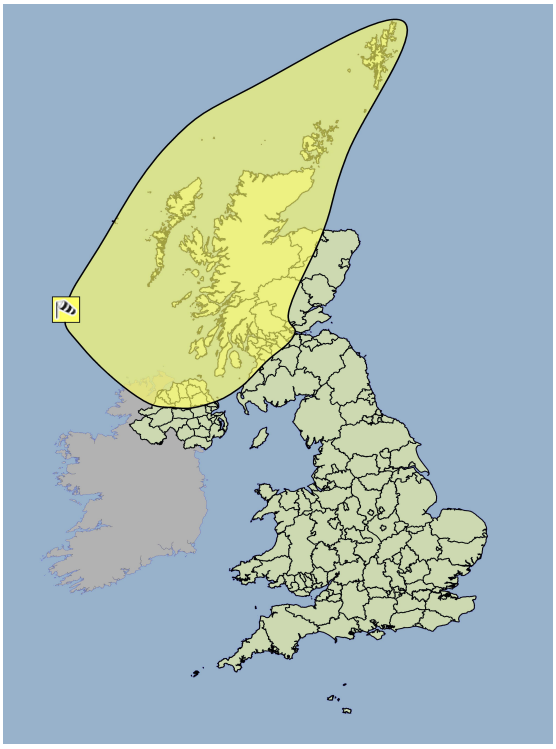
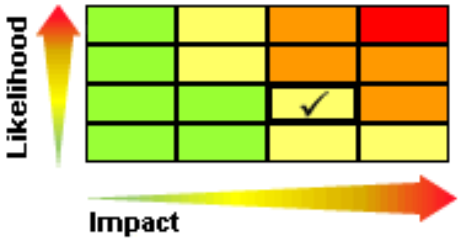
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A rapidly deepening area of low pressure will pass close to the NW of Scotland during Thursday morning. Although there is some uncertainty about the depth and exact track of this low, the high gusts, in combination with heavy rain, and some coastal flooding seems likely to bring disruption to travel.

In the wake of the main storm, (beyond the period of this warning), a regime of wintry showers will bring an increased risk of hill snowfall and icy roads.

Given the potential for a significant winter storm the public should continue to monitor the Met Office website for updates to this warning.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Wind

Valid from 00:05 on Thu, 19th Dec 2013 until 12:00 on Thu, 19th Dec 2013

Severe gale force winds are likely to affect parts of Northern Ireland, central and northern Scotland early on Thursday; gusts may exceed 80 mph locally. The wind will lead to large waves with some over-topping possible, and will be accompanied by heavy rain for a time. Squally wintry showers will follow into the afternoon and evening.

The public should be aware of disruption to travel from this combination of weather events.
